

PUTTING KIDS FIRST AFTER THE STORM

Hurricane Katrina: 10-year impact*

In the devastating wake of Hurricane Katrina, KaBOOM! built public-private partnerships and marshalled the power of volunteers to help kids recover, manage toxic stress, learn and grow, despite adversity. We stayed over the long haul and continue that commitment to this day.

USING PLAY AS THE SOLUTION

Following a disaster, kids are among the most vulnerable and are at risk of experiencing toxic stress. After Katrina, play was prioritized as part of the solution. Research has shown that play, along with caring adults, can help prevent the detrimental effects of toxic stress response.

"Each of us can be better neighbors. Just as strangers helped each other during the storm, we've got to always have each other's back and build a community bonded by trust, compassion and justice—one where our kids can play outside at night and our porches are full of laughter and stories shared by family and friends."

Mayor Mitch Landrieu, City of New Orleans
